GoogleÂ .Q: Appending data to Array I am trying to append some data into my Array. the data are dynamically coming from database and i want to display them into Table view. for example var arr :[[String:Any]] = String if user select one of item from table view and pass to func below. func itemSelect(item: String) -> Void { var productDetail = ItemDetails(item: item, images: nil, price: "") self.arr.append(productDetail) but i am getting empty table view. i want to see all the details of the selected item from tableview into my Array Any help would be appreciated. A: arr is an array of arrays. This means that when you write arr.append(productDetail) you actually append a single array to arr, not a new array. Do something like this instead: for productDetail in arr { productDetail.append(productDetail) } Or if arr contains multiple arrays (which it shouldn't, since we just told it to append a single one), do this: arr.append(productDetail) Media News Media Live Medals won by Canada and Australia ahead of India. No comments: Post a Comment About Me Hello my name is XUBAT and i like to write reviews about application that are always updated. All of the software that i provide in this blog have been checked by me and i use only those applications that really useful to have on your computer. All of the software that i provide are free and i created this blog in order to share my experience. I think that's why people can enjoy the use of this software.Coaching at the highest levels brings with it a great deal of complexity. Whether one is coaching a professional athlete or a child in the neighborhood, one major factor that all coaches share is that they have an innate passion for what they do. This passion is fueled by the desire to learn and to make a difference in others' lives. But coaching is more than a passion. It is also a demanding job that can require considerable time, energy, and resources to be successful. There are many "best-practice" guidelines that coaches can follow to stay on top of their game. In this article, I'd like to share with you three very basic, yet critically important, ways that coaches can stay on track in order to better coach athletes and young people. 1. It's Not What You Say, It's What They Hear How many times do coaches come to the practice facility or meet rooms and try to do something with a group of kids that turns out to be counterproductive? What most people don't realize is that their job is to provide kids with an arena in which they can perform. They need to develop an atmosphere that allows for growth and creativity. So, coaches, the way you communicate with your players in the coaching room is critical to their success. Here are two keys to a successful coaching environment: • Being able to relate. When you feel that you can relate to your players, they will trust you. • Listening to your players. Your players need to feel heard and understood. Not sure if you can relate? Take the quiz below. 2. Mental Skills for Making Connections Coaches have a tough job. But they do have it all figured out. They know how they want their kids to play, and they are familiar with the strengths and weaknesses of their players. So, what is it that they do differently to make the most of their time with their
